The GICB program offers funding support for construction and retrofits of community buildings where Canadians gather, access essential services, learn and play

Green and Inclusive Community Building Program

Through Infrastructure Canada, The federal government is providing up to $1.5 billion in funding over five years through the Green and Inclusive Community Buildings (GICB) program. With the objective of improving the availability and inclusivity of community buildings in areas that are currently underserved, the GICB program aims to stimulate the economy, create job opportunities, and align to the goals of Canada's strengthened climate plan.

Funding through this program will serve to build and adapt community buildings to reduce carbon emissions, advance best practices in reducing the release of greenhouse gases (GHGs), as well as foster awareness of, and alignment to, green building standards, and encourage best-in-class building design for climate change resilience.
